AUSTRALIA'S PLAN TO LEAD THE WORLD IN RECYCLING SCRAP METAL

Following an ambitious plan set up in 2005 by the then Minister for Defense, Senator Robert Dill, Australia is about to embark on Stage II of its plan to show the world that this country is serious about recycling, by spending over $6 billion dollars purchasing scrap metal from the U.S.

The scrap metal, currently referred to as 'Joint Task Force Hornet Fighter planes', was so called so as to confuse any other internationally based

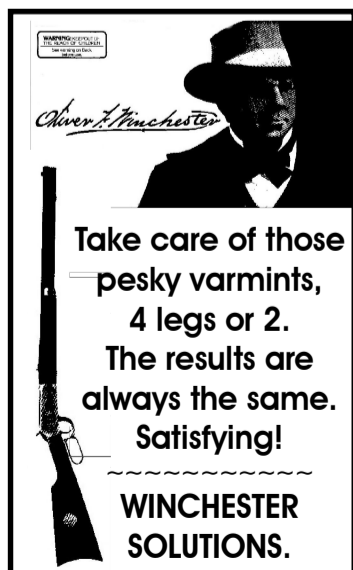

'would be' scrap metal buyers. The current mastermind behind this subtle plan is the current Defense Minister, Brendon Brayne-Dayed.

It was back in 2005 when Australia took out the honors as 'Master Strategist of the World', when it paid out $1.1 billion dollars for scrap metal, in the secret 'Seasprite' project. A stunned world watched in awe at the Australian line of cool thinking, thus putting this country in the fore-front in masterful strategic planning.

News of the Australian breakthrough was quickly picked up in Moscow, where Russian defense chiefs immediately held a meeting and decided to contact Australia with an offer to sell scrap metal in the form of World War 1 submarines.

Australia is seriously considering this latest offer.

Take care of those pesky varmints, 4 legs or 2. The results are always the same. Satisfying!

A STRANGER MOVES INTO DRY GULCH

Tuesday, March 25, 2007

Bull

The good citizens of Dry Gulch recently had the pleasure of meeting their latest 'son' Bull, aka Michael. The man is quiet, secure, focused and seemingly ready to handle trouble. Bull seems unafraid and even un-moved by the intimidating members of the Ebenezer Gang.

It now remains to be seen what this man is made of as he attempts to fit into the wild, God forsaken town of Dry Gulch. All we can say is - Good Luck Bull!
