DAYLIGHT SAVING REJECTED IN QUEENSLAND ONCE MORE

FADED CURTAINS NO LONGER THE ONLY ISSUE WITH QUEENSLANDERS OVER DAYLIGHT SAVING

Once more, with daylight saving having been resumed across the country, Queensland has opted out.

As we all know, the original reason that Queenslanders rejected the extra hour a day during summertime was that too many people complained about their curtains fading.

There was also talk about roosters being confused and cows not being able to have their milk ready on time.

It appears that science and nature is behind the reasons now for the rejection of daylight saving.

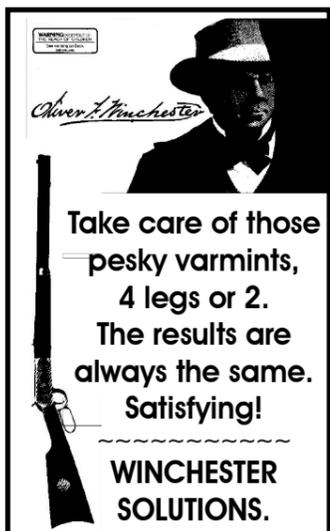

An official from the Queensland weather bureau claims to have irrefutable evidence that the extra daylight everybody has been saving, is contributing heavily to global warming.

"If you take all that extra daylight that everyone has been saving, you're sure to end up with some pretty hot weather" stated the spokesman.

The Queensland government has issued instructions that in an effort to reverse the effects of daylight saving, all clocks are to be turned back 24 hours.

"This should compensate for all the extra hours saved" said the official.

Take care of those pesky varmints, 4 legs or 2. The results are always the same. Satisfying!

DID YOU KNOW?

The oldest human skeleton ever found in the Western Hemisphere was discovered in 1953 near Midland, Texas. It was first believed that the skeleton, the remains of a 30-year-old woman, was 10,000 years old. However, the latest estimates are that it is much older.

The term "red light district" came from the Red Light Bordello in Dodge City, Kansas. The front door of the building was made of red glass and produced a red glow to the outside world when lit at night. The name carried over to refer to the town's brothel district.
