FUEL PRICES SOAR AS HORSE FEED REACHES RECORD HIGH PRICES

Hay hits $110 a bale on the international markets

It appears that cheap horse feed is a thing of the past as hay hit $110 a bale on the world markets today.

Analysts are predicting that this is only the start of the spiraling rise, with prices set to peak at over $300 a bale within the next 3 years.

One of the problems driving up the prices is that the traditional suppliers of maize, corn and hay have been based in Washington DC and in the Australian capital, Canberra.

These 2 key areas are best known for supplying the fertilizer to grow the crops, with ample amounts of bull***t being produced on a daily basis.

This source of supply was disrupted recently with the main supplier of fertilizer, J. Howard-Ino and Co., exiting Canberra.

With the United States supplier of first grade bull***t, George D'Ubyah & Co., due to depart Washington later this year, the entire fertilizer industry has been thrown into complete chaos.

There have been some economists suggesting that alternative transporation must be found and they believe the answer could be found in the Middle East.

Places such as Iraq, Iran and Libya have been begging the west to come in and help themselves to their oil supplies for use in motor omnibuses (horseless carriages).

"We want you to have it...Free!" stated a Saudi official recently. "This stuff is a menace because it makes our sand moist and gooey and our camels find it hard to move".

Take care of those pesky varmints, 4 legs or 2. The results are always the same. Satisfying!

- 1- Buffalo bones, which were strewn across the Great Plains after the mass buffalo hunts of 1870-1883, were bought by Eastern firms for the production of fertilizer and bone china. "Bone pickers" earned eight dollars a ton for the bones.
- 2- Around 1541, the present state of Texas was called Tejas, a Spanish version of the Caddo word meaning "allies."
- 3- Rumor has it that the tradition of spreading saw dust on the floors of bars and saloons started in Deadwood, South Dakota due to the amount of gold dust that would fall on the floor. The saw dust was used to hide the fallen gold dust and was swept up at the end of the night.
- 4- After serving more than twenty years in prison, Cole Younger got a job selling tombstones, worked for a while in a Wild West show with Frank James, and died quietly in 1916 in Lee's Summit, Missouri where he was known as an elderly churchgoer.
