ROYAL PANIC AT KENSINGTON PALACE

FRANTIC EFFORTS TO COVER UP OFFENSIVE ARTWORKS AND ITEMS THAT MAY OFFEND THE US PRESIDENT AND FIRST LADY

Kensington Tuesday April 26 2016:

Kensington Palace was thrown into total panic today, shortly before the U. S. President, Barry O'bummer and his first (and probably his last) lady were due to arrive for an informal dinner with the British royals.

It was discovered that there were some paintings proudly on display mentioning the words 'negro' and 'boy', with the occasional book laying around with the word 'Rastus' mentioned in it.

One such painting, called 'The Negro Page', was seen to be in a very prominent position and all attempts to cover it up were in vain. It wasn't until Prince Chuck came up with a splendid idea at the last moment and that was to replace the face in the painting with a white face.

"It was a ripping idea if I say so myself" Prince Chuck commented, as he proudly displayed his handywork to our reporter.

The only loose end to the project was quickly tied up with the Prince hurriedly crossing out the original title on the painting and applying a new name with the left-over type white.

The Kokoda Kid On The Mend

Dry Gulch - April 27, 2016 -

Latest reports coming in state that the Kokoda Kid is recovering quite well after being thrown from a wild bicycle recently. The bicycle fared worse, as it had to be put down after the incident.

Take care of those pesky varmints, 4 legs or 2. The results are always the same. Satisfying!

WINCHESTER SOLUTIONS.

BEHIND THE HEADLINES

ROYAL FAMILY GO INTO PANIC MODE JUST MINUTES BEFORE THE US PRESIDENT ARRIVES FOR LUNCHEON DATE

HIDE THE WORD 'NEGRO' BEFORE THE OBAMAS ARRIVE!

The Daily Mail reports that aides for the British Royal Family found a potentially offensive word written on a nameplate in the drawing room of Kensington Palace just moments before President Barack Obama and First Lady Michelle Obama arrived for an informal dinner with the royals. The word "negro" was discovered on the nameplate for a piece of art that adorned the drawing room and was quickly covered. The aid used a potted plant and lamp to cover the offending word moments before the Obamas entered the room for the first time.

The drawing room was recently redesigned by the Duchess of Cambridge, Kate Middleton. The Duchess is a history of art graduate and would have likely been drawn to historic pieces of art such as "The Negro Page" by Albert Cuyp. The large painting was hung centrally behind the main sitting area where Obama would join the royals for conversation. Photographs taken of the royal family with the Obamas are the first to surface of the drawing room since its redesign.
