DONALD GRUMP GRABS VICTORY IN THE RACE TO THE WHITE HOUSE

WILD PROTESTS AND RIOTS BREAK OUT IN THE U.S. AS IT BATHES IN THE GENTLE AFTER-GLOW OF A LONG CAMPAIGN

Grump tells FBI director, "You're FIRED!"

Dry Gulch, SASA County.

The United States has been rocked by wild protests and numerous riots today, leaving many buildings and motor vehicles burning all the way across the country, as Americans celebrate the end of another election.

Thousands of students, as well as people paid to stir up trouble, marched along streets and highways and anywhere else they could destroy something in a meaningless manner, protesting the election of Donald Grump as the 45th President of the 'United' States.

Many people, particularly in California and Texas, are furious that a Grump administration could prevent them from bringing in dirt cheap labor from Mexico.

"How are we expected to do stuff like mopping floors, washing and ironing and cleaning up puke from the floor that was left by our kids after they got blind drunk at a frat party the night before?" screamed one obviously upset mother, as she contemplated having to do some work that she had never had to do before.

In Texas, students from Redneck University made their feelings known by burning all their cars in the university car park.

"Y'all can see we mean business" yelled one student, as he watched his car burn. He declined to be interviewed, saying that he had to leave for football training, although he was at a loss as to how he would get there now.

Another student, Ima Goodroot, from the Redneck cheerleading squad was also another person clearly unhappy with the election outcome.

"This is supposed to be a democracy" she said. "How can it be true democracy if people vote in someone like Donald Grump! It just isn't fair when more people get to gang up on y'all and get their way just cuz thay's more of 'em" she cried.

The entertainment business is in panic mode tonight also, with many celebrities contacting the President elect, explaining that all the nasty things they said about him on TV was just an act.

Actress Heidi Glumm stated that there were much more issues that could come out of a Grump presidency.

"What if he wants to build a wall across Canada like he wants to do in Mexico?" She asked. "That would mean we would never get any more worthwhile comedians down here. That would be disastrous!" She said, as she broke down, crying uncontrollably.

DID YOU KNOW?

- 1 - There were about 45,000 working cowboys during the hey-days of the cattle drives. Of those, some 5,000 were African American.
- 2 - Three bandits who robbed the Adams Express car in a passenger train near Bannack, Montana were rounded up by vigilantes and promptly hanged, a fate that became all too familiar in the lawless West when citizens, angered over vacillating courts, meted out their own brand of swift justice and self-satisfying justice.
- 3 - From 1778 until 1871, the U.S. Government ratified 370 treaties with the Native American Tribes. After 1871, acts of Congress, executive orders and executive agreements replaced the rarely enforced treaties
- 4 - One of the earliest cattle barons of the great Southwest was the unlikely Jesuit explorer and mapmaker, Father Eusebio Francisco Kino. He came to southern Arizona in 1687 to found missions, but while he was there he introduced European livestock and ways to plant grain to feed them.
- 5 - Isom Dart, one of the few black gunslingers of the Old West was killed near Brown's Hole by the feared stock detective and bounty hunter Tom Horn.
